

LO: To peer-assess blogs and understand the importance of commenting on blogs.

Today, you will be reading blogs written by your friends and providing them with feedback. If you log on to Purple Mash and click on the green sharing tab at the top, then go to 'shared blogs', you will be able to view the blogs created by everyone in Deer Class. As a class, you have created lots of amazing blogs about gymnastics, cheerleading, football, swimming, musicals and films, music, cooking, horse riding, and many more. Reading these blogs is an amazing way for all of you to stay in touch and support each other. Harry has also created some brilliant games for you to play too.

In today's lesson, you need to choose 5 blogs that interest you, and you are going to think about what the blog does really well and something that could be done to make the blog even better. Think about whether the blog includes a title, introduction, subheadings, and a mixture of images and text. Record the feedback in your books and also in the comment section of each blog, allowing your classmates to see the feedback - remember to be sensible and constructive.

Once you have done this, you can go back to your blog and think about what you have done really well and what could have been done better (record this in your books), you might find something in someone else's blog that you want to steal for next time. Have a look at Ava's blog on gymnastics and Sam Harris' blog called Fascinating Felines, to see how to structure a blog and use a mixture of text and images.

It is important to keep updating a blog to keep readers engaged, so throughout the week, you might want to add another blog post.
